HELPS International teams with MedAware Systems to support its medical mission in Guatemala

August 29 - Broomfield, Colorado

MedAware Systems, Inc. announced today it is partnering with HELPS International in a pilot of the Company's SOHInfo™ Treatment Decision Support system. HELPS clinicians will be using SOHInfo on their upcoming medical mission serving rural areas in Guatemala.

HELPS International has been assisting the rural population of the developing world through programs in education and literacy, medicine, and projects of practical, social concern and spiritual value since 1984. HELPS takes teams of clinicians from the United States and Latin America to staff medical facilities in Central America. HELPS' teams are fully equipped to provide these healthcare services to, as close as possible, US standards. In addition to providing direct healthcare services, HELPS implements comprehensive programs in the third world in an effort to secure better long-term health for the underserved.

"We are honored to be working with one of the leading providers of healthcare services for the underserved in Central America", said Michael Willis, CEO of MedAware. He adds, "SOHInfo was envisioned and developed to help improve healthcare around the world by providing all of the available evidence on treatment efficacy. This pilot opportunity supporting HELPS in the remarkable work they do brings us one step closer to realizing that world vision."

Said Michelle Hollaender, HELPS International Development Director and Medical Team Leader: "We thank MedAware Systems for providing us with their incredible SOHInfo platform as we pilot this innovative Treatment Decision Support System on our medical mission to Guatemala in September. Our HELPS Team Esperanza doctors and surgeons are very excited to use this new technology as they bring medical aid to the most remote areas in the Guatemalan Highlands".
